(1) Procurement of Candidates.

priority for acceptance into this OCS was usually given to those who had served in the Cadet Corps located in Warsaw.ಶ 90 percent of the OCS candidates came directly from civilian life and were from the military classes 1928 to 1934. All of these candidates had a high educational background and possibly volunteered for the OCS at the Academy in order to avoid induction into the Polish Army. the remainder of the 600 candidates former conscripted sergeants who had completed their period of obligatory service and volunteered for OCS training at the Academy. During August 1954 arrival of about 60 civilians at the Academy members of a new OCS class. Their average age was estimated at 19.

(2) Uniforms.

All candidates were officer-type uniforms but without any officers rank insignia. However, an unknown number of candidate squad leaders and leaders of other formations were EM insignia such as that of corporals and sergeants.

(3) Entrance Examinations.

From personal observation, all OCS candidates were given about six weeks to prepare for their entrance examinations at the Academy. These entrance examinations were believed to be based on subjects such as mathematics, physics, chemistry, and other academic subjects. Military subjects were not included in these examinations since all candidates received basic training during their attendance at the Academy.

attending the three-month course. Upon completion of the course in June 1954, several of these officers were retained for an indefinite period of service at the Academy as lecturers. An unknown number were assigned to unknown Polish Army units for duty, and an unknown number were released from active service.

Attendance by Academy Staff Personnel at a Possible General Officers' Conference.

During February 1954, an unknown number of high ranking Polish and Soviet staff officers of the Academy attended a general officers' conference or command-post exercise at some unknown location within the Warsaw Military District. This lasted about seven days. It was common knowledge among the officers of the Academy that general officers and their staffs from all military districts of Poland attended this conference or exercise.

neither Polish Army units nor any other troops were involved in or present at the conference or exercise.
